

Men lost their lives, many from Dore
Young men with future, such the terror of war
Soldiers and pilots and sailors all died
At home their wives, their parents and children all cried

They battled in planes, in ships and in tanks
For our freedom they fought, to which we owe them our thanks
We know nothing of bombs, or marching or death
Or those trapped in camps struggling for breath

A war starts too easily, but we must never forget
That the legacy of war is filled with regret
When countries fall out, don't fight, find the cure
It is our job to insist that there is no more

In the fields of battle stands the delicate poppy
Please remember the wars and help CHANGE, not copy
What a waste of those that died in the war
Let the poppy remind us that there should be no more

A simple flower standing out – red and bright
A memory of soldiers who died terribly in fight
November 11th is Remembrance Day
A two minute silence, what more can we say?
